tured. But laid (did lie) he don't care, knit, here's your clothes, and have drank used by about half the cultured. Pled, fit, sweat, shrunk, dove, and dreamt are used by the cultured in the areas where they are used by the illiterates. Those who are curious about usage will find here hours of diversion—and enlightenment.

SHAKESPEAREAN STAGE PRODUCTION: THEN AND NOW. By CECILE DE BANKE. McGraw-Hill. $6.00.

A good résumé of all the important material on the Shakespearean theater for the idle reader or the student in the field, it is, in addition, an exceptionally valuable handbook for anyone planning seriously to produce one of the immortal plays. Including sketches of authentic costumes; photographs of noted actors in make-up; a fine bibliography of Elizabethan dances, music, and songs; lists of recordings available for use as accompanying music for the plays, as well as recordings for sound effects, the practical technical information is extremely useful to the novice director-producer.

Reissues and Reprints
